The present disclosure relates to a semiconductor structure, and particularly to a fin-FET with a nitride spacer for silicon germanium (SiGe) fins and a method for manufacturing the same. FinFETs and Tri-Gate devices offer superior short-channel effect control due to a three-dimensional channel, better gate control and higher current drive. A FinFET is a transistor built around a thin piece of silicon called the fin. The fin contains the drain, source and body regions of the transistor. The channel is formed in the vertical fin from the drain to the source. A gate is provided over (e.g., wrapping) the fin. The gate allows the channel to be controlled. The Tri-Gate device is another type of three-dimensional transistor in which a gate wraps around three sides of a channel region. A silicon-on-insulator (SOI) wafer is used for manufacturing of Tri-Gate devices. The semiconductor die has a back gate (or buried gate) on the buried oxide. The back gate is electrically connected to a separate metal layer. The buried oxide allows a higher drive current. A rapid method for the isolation of highly enriched Epstein-Barr virus-specific primed, interferon-sensitive, virus-producing cells from PBMC. A rapid and reproducible method was developed for the preparation of highly enriched Epstein-Barr virus (EBV) binding cells (B cells) from peripheral blood mononuclear cells (PBMC) by fluorescence activated cell sorting (FACS). The source of EBV was a B95-8 strain of EBV-transformed lymphoblastoid cell line (LCL). The method is based on the selection of a cell population by its specific and high affinity attachment to biotinylated EBV particles. No knowledge of the identity of the EBV receptor on B cells is required. The enrichment of EBV binding cells isolated by this method is at least 1000-fold, and the cells can be maintained in liquid culture for at least 7 days, without interference from nonbinding cell populations. Primed and interferon-sensitive EBV producing cells can be easily isolated and maintained. The presence of interferon-gamma modulates the number of EBV-binding cells. On the basis of flow cytometric analyses, it appears that most of the B cells in the unfractionated PBMC population (less than 1% of the total cells) attach to the EB
